Country Pride Dance Club: Interview by Annette Gray

A community dance can be an exciting time – for those who are comfortable on a dance floor. If thoughts like, “I wish I was a better dancer,” or the horrifying, “What if I flub up on the dance floor in front of all my friends?” have ever crossed your mind, there is a simple remedy: the Country Pride Dance Club. This dance club not only teaches dance steps, but focuses on making dancing fun.

Country Pride’s president and co-founder, Rob Ironside, and partner, Kathie Chernetski, say the Red Deer-based club officially began in 1991. Yet the idea started a few years earlier. Rob, growing up in the Everdell area southwest of Rocky Mountain House, began going to community country dances with his parents when he was about 10 years old. It didn’t take him long to realize dancing was something he really enjoyed. So, he began taking lessons and training with instructors, such as the well-known David Getty. Rob entered and won a variety of dance competitions in Edmonton, Red Deer, and as far away as Oregon, Idaho, Utah and Las Vegas.

Competing as a couple and with a dance team gave him a perspective that has helped build the dance club to where it is today. “In 1989, myself and three others decided to form a dance club,” Rob goes on to explain. “Word got out, and more dancers joined us, and we danced once a week in a basement room at the old Capri Hotel. New members kept coming, and before long we had over 300 members, from all over Central Alberta – from Rocky in the west to Stettler in the east.

“Shortly after the club was incorporated, we formed a dance team that competed at one of the first festivals in Alberta and won in our division. The club went on to form a performance team that performed at pancake breakfasts, parades, rodeos and concerts. We even opened for bands such as the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band,” Rob remarks proudly.

Rob was also the founder of the Red Hot Dance Festival which ran from 1992 to 2002. “In 1995 we had 1,500 people come through the festival with thirteen dance teams participating,” he says.

How has Country Pride kept up with the times? Both Rob and Kathie are quick to say the club has changed its focus from dance competitions to promoting dancing for enjoyment. “We love to dance, and we want to pass on that love,” says Kathie. “We want our beginners to relax and have fun. We focus on the ‘grass roots,’ the people that are going to become part of this growing dance community.” Currently, Country Pride has 60 members. Of these, 25 belong to the club’s dance team. Spectators may have seen the team dancing in their red and black costumes this year on Canada Day at Bower Ponds, or seen their spectacular Peavey Mart Barn Dance performance on Gaetz Avenue.

Every Sunday evening, from 8:15 to 9:15 PM (September to June), Country Pride welcomes the public to Red Deer’s Festival Hall. “We teach all levels and all age groups, everyone from beginners to advanced dancers,” Kathie adds, “and we teach the waltz, two-step, six-step, cha-cha, night club, east and west coast swing, jive, polka, pony, and many different line dances. The team performance features nine of these dances. We are always looking for people that want to learn to dance and/or join the team.”

Still feeling intimidated by dancing in public or can't fit Sundays in your schedule? You can always take private lessons from Rob and Kathie in the comfort of their home-based dance studio.
